"He regarded no orders, rules nor customs."

Not the least amazing thing about Hamilton's flight is the fact that this young aviator, of whom Glenn H. Curtiss ungrudgingly says: "He is the best filer in the world, I think," made his first flight in a real acroplane on November 28 last. But he had had a long training in the air and had already acquired that fearlessness, poise and knowledge of air currents which speedily placed him in the front rank of the world's aviators. His mother, now Mrs. N. Beaudette, tells many stories of her boy's early experiments in New Britain, Conn., where Charles was lorn, 29 years ago. When but a little chap, he smashed his mother's best parasol by using it as a parachute in a flight from the upper door of a barn.

Note at all discouraged, the lad began

Not at all discouraged, the lad began experimenting with kites of all sorts and sizes. Then, not being able to lift himself off the ground, he compromised on a sail wagon with which he ran over the grocer's cart. His mother, who admits that she sympathized with Charles desire to fly, paid the grocer's bill with never a thought of resorting to the maternal slipper.

Then came at last the day when the boy really found himself aloft. A balloonist was giving an exhibition in town and the boy begged for a flight and got it. That flight appears to have been the starting point in his later carrer—he realized instinctively that he had found his life work.

Many Close Calis. Not at all discouraged, the lad began

Many Close Calls.

Hamilton has reached his present eminence in his profession not without perhaps more than the usual number of close calls that come to every man whose field of work is the air. But he is a little chap—he weighs only 110 pounds—and he is wiry, quick and resourceful. Men who have worked with him declare that he falls as nonchalantly as does a cat, always right side up with care. While working with Israel the ground, being drawn by an auto-mobile at 20 miles an hour when friends found that the nervy, cool headed little chap had, in the first seconds of that sickening drop, climbed to the upper plane of his glider. The framework below broke his fall and he was only a little stunned. The only peevishness he exhibited in connection with the accident was due to the fact that he had lost a good cigar somecigarettes. They steady his nerves, he says. There is always a piece of the lighted punk fastened to the framework of the machine in reach of the aviator's face when he is flying. It has to be within reach of his face, for one cannot attend to eight or ten one cannot attend to eight or ten levers and light matches at the same time, while flying 50 miles an hour. Hamilton's most exciting session with a dirigible balloon was some 14,000 feet above Paterson, N. J. While making an ascent there the ballast fell off and his big dirigible promptly pointed its nose toward the sky and shot upward like a projectile for two miles. Hamilton climbed into for two miles. Hamilton climbed into the rigging and was trying to open the escape valve when the gas bag burst. After about a mile of sheer drop, the torn silk shaped itself into a crude but serviceable parachute and the aviator

Discovered "The Glide."

Hamilton's famous aeroplane glide, with which he has startled spectators so many times, was discovered by ac-cident. One day while the aviator was flying at a convenient height, the crank shaft of his motor broke. He realized instantly that as soon as he lost mo-mentum he must drop.

With that almost sixth sense seem ingly possessed by men who navigate the air, he instinctively deflected his forward planes and shot toward the earth at a sharp angle, gaining instead of losing momentum as he went. Near the earth he threw the forward planes up again, rose gracefully and then set automobile accident in the district court. William Vesper, a farmer thrown from his buggy on the West Sixth street drive by William Gordon, a grocer, was awarded $342.75 by a ury last night.

The accident occurred on the even-ing of July 12, 1909, when the farmer left his farm near the city to drive in. The machine struck his rig from the rear tossing it into the ditch, while his horse ran and jumped over a hedge fence out of danger. Vesper by hanging onto the reins was dragged from in front of the automobile wheels. Injuries to one of his shoulders was severe enough to keep him out of his fields for three months. For hired help made necessary and for doctor bills, he recovered. Punitive damages were denied as the accident was caused rather by inexperience than recklessness. The total amount
